

The CV in the digital age

A guide for the NED Candidate.

Our Commitment to Candidates

We invest in building non-transactional partnerships with our candidates outside the search process. Our focus on a constructive candidate experience means that you can trust our advice throughout your executive career.

Introduction

| | |
|---|----|
| Introduction | 03 |
| <hr/> | |
| Part I: Writing your CV | 05 |
| 1. Fonts and Formatting | 06 |
| 2. The Heading | 07 |
| 3. Executive Profile | 08 |
| 4. Professional Experience | 10 |
| 5. Education | 15 |
| 6. Additional Information | 16 |
| 7. What not to include on your CV | 19 |
| <hr/> | |
| Part II: Beyond the CV | 20 |
| Take charge of your Internet Existence | 20 |
| <hr/> | |
| About Odgers Berndtson | 23 |

Welcome to this guide to creating a CV that'll make the most of your skills, talent and experience, and hopefully get you the non-executive directorship you're after. Also, read our advice on how to ensure your online identity plays its role too.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

There are good reasons to seek a non-executive directorship. For those still in an executive role, a complementary non-executive position can help broaden experience, horizons and networks. For others, a portfolio career can provide a fascinating opportunity to capitalise on their experience for the benefit of a range of other organisations.

Whatever the motivation, the marketplace for non-executive positions is a crowded one. Such are the attractions of the role, that there is no shortage of candidates seeking a finite number of positions. And board turnover is typically slow. Roles are drip-fed into the market, they don't come in a flood. So the role where you are the perfect fit may be months, even years, away from coming to market.

In short, the market for non-executive roles is relatively small, highly competitive and turns over only slowly. The better news is that a considered, consistent approach to finding your first role will maximise your chances of success.

TO BEGIN WITH, A GOOD CV IS VITAL

Your CV – whether it is uploaded on LinkedIn or not – is frequently the first detailed information an executive recruiter or potential employer will receive about you, and the basis of their initial impression. And, as we know, first impressions count.

Think of your CV as your marketing brochure. What is your offer, what is your ‘unique selling proposition’, how are you differentiated from the competition?

It is also an expression of your aspirations. CVs are not just about the past, but the future too.

As retained executive recruiters, we see thousands of CVs each year in our search for exceptional people. They vary in length, format, and – unfortunately – readability. Our experience is the basis of this booklet. We trust you’ll find it useful.

WHO ARE YOU? AND WHAT DO YOU WANT?

Always presume you’re an unknown. So, start with the twin basics of any CV. The reader wants to know what you can do and what you’re looking for.

It helps to be specific. While boards typically expect candidates to bring a broad sweep of commercial experience, they will also seek ‘spikes’ in terms of specific skills and experience. These may include financial skills (for the audit committee), or ones relating to overseas markets, customer engagement, digital transformation, culture change, restructuring, or City-facing skills, to name but a few. But don’t try to be all things to all people. There is a natural temptation for candidates to try and demonstrate the broadest possible range of skills, which is not only confusing, but only serves to flatten the ‘spikes’ that will help you stand out.

We recognise that no one likes to be pigeonholed, but ask yourself: where do you fit? A headhunter research process involves digging into a few specific pigeonholes that match the brief we have received from our client. Non-executive director candidates are better advised to demonstrate real depth in a few key areas than try and spread themselves too thin.

A strong CV and cover note will clearly express the sectors in which you are likely to make the greatest contribution, the size/scale of the organisation, and the kinds of challenges that an organisation will be going through where you can help.

Before we kick off, one question. How many CVs should you have? Well, flexibility is key. Don’t be afraid of tailoring your CV to the board position you’re after. It shouldn’t be set in stone, nor should it be a set length, for that matter. A CV in an industry in which you are a well-known figure needn’t be as lengthy as one in which you are breaking new ground, as it were. Of course, the differences will be a matter of degree, not an entirely different you.

PART I

Writing your CV

1. FONTS & FORMATTING

PLAIN AND SIMPLE, PLEASE

Right, let's deal with style. Things like the font and formatting do matter, as we'll explain. Get it wrong and you could be rejected straight away.

The people reading your CV are scanning it for key elements. In the early stages of a search, HR and executive search professionals essentially glance at job titles, company names, dates, and education. If they don't easily find these things, or are distracted by atypical elements, the CV winds up at the bottom of the pile.

With that in mind, our general guidelines are as follows.

KEEP IT SIMPLE

Employers care about content. Flamboyant formatting, prose, or fonts often come off as more ostentatious than clever. A traditionally-formatted CV remains more likely – in our field – to secure an interview than a video posted on YouTube. (Of course, if the position is not traditional and is explicitly looking for creativity, you might tailor your response, and even the medium, appropriately.)

Use a single-spaced, 12-point font. The font should be simple and easy to read. We recommend that senior executives use Times New Roman or Cambria.

When e-mailing or uploading your CV, it is best to use a Word document because recruiters often convert CVs into their own formats. Vitally, ATS (Applicant Tracking Systems) systems can't scan PDFs, which means – you guessed it – automatic rejection.

Make sure your bullet points are round, not triangular or square. Some ATS software gets hung up on complex symbols.

Do not include a picture (or worse still, a selfie). Many employers will disregard CVs with pictures.

Be minimal with typographical emphasis, i.e. bold, italic, underline, and full word CAPS. With our recommended formatting, recruiters can quickly find each company you've worked for. Not just because companies are in bold, but because nothing else is.

Edit, edit, and edit again. Throw out all unnecessary words. All of them. Every single one.

“Do not include a picture (or worse still, a selfie). Many employers will disregard CVs with pictures.”

DID YOU KNOW?

60% of CVs are dismissed because they are cluttered or poorly formatted.

2. THE HEADING

The heading should appear at the top of every page and include the following: your name, address, and contact information. Each page after the first should begin with an abridged heading that includes your name, e-mail address, and page number. We recommend providing only one phone number and one email. When you list multiple numbers, a recruiter may feel that you'll be hard to track down.

There are several acceptable methods for formatting a CV heading, but we prefer this one:

“ Depending on your industry, you may also provide links to your LinkedIn, Twitter, or website URL. ”

THINGS TO CONSIDER

When it comes to your email provider, it's a good idea to have a Gmail or a personal email provider. Hotmail and AOL have behind-the-times associations.

Make sure your email address is recognisably yours. Susan Fletcher should not have "S_67_F@candidate.com" as her email address.

Depending on your industry, you may also provide links to your LinkedIn, Twitter, or website URL.

DID YOU KNOW?

59% of recruiters will reject CVs on the basis of spelling or grammatical errors.

3. EXECUTIVE PROFILE

Located at the top of your CV, the executive profile is an opportunity for you to summarise your current career standing and relevant skills. This section has a number of acceptable names, including Career Profile, CV

Profile, Key Competencies, and Expertise.

A typical executive profile has two parts: a short sentence or paragraph followed by a list of core skills. Here is an abridged example:

SUSAN FLETCHER

74 Resume Road, A City, Postcode
sfletcher67@gmail.com 00000 000 000 (mobile)

EXECUTIVE PROFILE

Experienced marketing director with major communications, account sales strategy, business development, and civic partnership expertise.

Core Skills:

- Development of strategic, business development, branding, and marketing plans
- Adept project manager able to handle complex information
- Process oriented with ability to prioritise and streamline tasks
- Proven ability to establish trusted relationships with colleagues at all levels of the organisation

The executive profile should provide an at-a-glance view of your current professional expertise with an emphasis on areas in which you excel or have deep experience.

When customising or updating your executive profile for specific NED opportunities, remember to highlight skills that are relevant to the role. For example, NEDs need to be strategic thinkers with the critical evaluation skills to challenge and contribute to corporate strategy. What is there in your current or previous roles that can show you might be capable of this?

It is very important that you are consistent. So, the content of your executive profile should match what appears on your CV and the information available about you on the internet. This includes LinkedIn, for example.

EXECUTIVE PROFILE OR OBJECTIVE STATEMENT?

An objective statement resembles the executive profile in a number of ways: it's a brief introduction located at the top of your resume. But instead of describing your current capabilities and key skills, the objective statement describes what you're looking for in your next position. This is your opportunity to articulate some clear-eyed career goals.

Read in conjunction with the rest of your CV, it makes clear whether you and the role you are after are a good fit. And it does make the recruiter's job easier, which is always a good thing.

DID YOU KNOW?

Nearly 50% of recruiters will disregard CVs that contain non-standard fonts, margins, or colours.

4. PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

This section, which can alternately be called Executive Experience, is the bulk of your CV.

FORMATTING

As we've emphasised earlier, it's imperative that your CV is rich in information, but can be quickly scanned. We recommend the format below.

NOTE THE MINIMALIST LOOK

Simply bold the company, and italicise the company description. Everything else is plain text.

The sentences in the responsibilities and key accomplishments sections should begin with verbs, not personal pronouns.

List the positions you've held in reverse chronological order, newest to oldest.

For your current position, use the present tense to describe responsibilities. Use the past tense for all previous accomplishments in former positions.

For each position, state your title and responsibilities. Include the number of employees you managed and your sales numbers or budget.

The employment dates should be divided by an en-dash (-), not a hyphen (-) or an em-dash (—).

SUSAN FLETCHER

sfletcher67@gmail.com

Page 2

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Company, location

Started - Present

Job Title

Brief company description

Responsible for writing 1-5 sentences. Do not use pronouns. Do not state the obvious. Mention aspects of the job that were not obviously implied by the job title.

Key Accomplishments

- Wrote a CV worth looking at despite fierce competition
- Etc. etc. (as many times as you need)

Company, location

Started - Present

Job Title

Etc

THE COMPANY DESCRIPTION

We recommend including this because it allows readers to understand your career without pre-existing familiarity of the companies you've worked for. You may be a Chief Financial Officer, but we want to know whether you were working for a regional retailer with $300 million in sales or a $6 billion global manufacturer of automotive products. Big difference.

RESPONSIBILITIES

This section is what it sounds like: a brief summation of the tasks associated with your position, especially those that can't be directly inferred from your job title. To save space, we recommend putting responsibilities in paragraph form, as in the career profile section.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

This is where you get specific about your successes. Here are some things to keep in mind:

Whenever possible, quantify these achievements. Instead of writing "Grew the business," write, "Grew the company from its initial inception to the market leader with $890 million in annual sales."

Avoid subjective self-assessment. Don't tell us you are "talented" or have "strong interpersonal skills". Those are idle boasts. Instead, be specific. If you have "received six medical device patents", we know you're talented. If you were "awarded the Chairman's Award in 2016", we know you're good with people.

LENGTH

Your CV should be as long as is necessary to concisely summarize your career. A candidate with a seven figure salary and 25-years of work experience will have a longer CV than a five figure employee who's still early in their career. Many executive-level resumes run to 4 or 5 pages. The question is, is everything necessary, is anything waffle?

Always state the facts concisely, honestly and without embellishment. Always write your own CV. No one knows more about you than you. (Of course, do get it spell-checked by a literate friend or colleague who might notice the mistakes you don't.)

State all of your previous and current roles. A good executive searcher will spend two to three hours interviewing you for his or her client, and if your CV is well-prepared, it will increase the depth and efficiency of those conversations.

Do not leave things out, and do not leave interpretations up for grabs. Here's why:

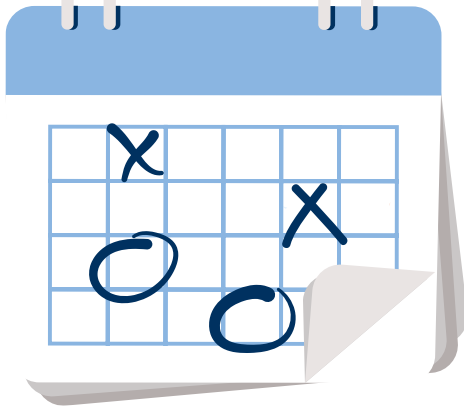

If you leave a job out of your CV because it doesn't seem relevant to your current career, an executive searcher might simply assume you weren't working during that time period. In fact, don't leave any gaps. Leave out your first ten years in the industry for the same reasons, and people might wonder if you're trying to hide your age.

Explain the gaps, and don't allow doubt to fill them.

The more jobs you list, the more potential affinity groups you enter yourself into.

What do we mean by affinity groups? Let's say you're an insurance executive; you've had a sterling 35-year career and you're looking for your next board appointment.

It might not seem relevant to include your first job on your CV's last page: an analyst position in the London office of Big Resume Bank. After all, you're an insurance executive; you left Big Resume after just two years, convinced that banking wasn't your thing. But what if the person reading your CV – maybe the chairperson of a board in need of a new director – also did their analyst years at BR's London branch?

Suddenly, instead of seeing a blank page, the chairperson sees you as someone with whom they've shared an experience, a place, a context, and maybe even some friends. You now share an affinity. You belong to the same affinity group. And people who belong to the same groups tend to advocate for each other, even subliminally.

SHORT TENURE

How do you talk about jobs held for brief periods? Take a look at the example below. There, you can see Susan Fletcher does several things right.

This is the second page of her resume. So she includes an abridged heading, complete with page number.

Because she was employed for less than a year, she listed months. If she had simply written 2010 - 2011, it would have implied two years of employment, which was not the case. By stating the facts, Susan avoids incurring a recruiter's distrust.

Susan gives a reason for her departure from GoodSeed. By doing so she (a) minimises the negative implications of short tenure, and (b) makes us feel like she's telling us what we want to know. A known blip on your CV is infinitely more favourable than an unknown one.

SUSAN FLETCHER

Page 2
sfletcher67@gmail.com

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

GoodSeed Bread Co., Sacramento, CA November 2010 - May 2011
Director of Marketing

The GoodSeed Bread Company, before being acquired by Peace Foods in March 2011, was the world's largest organic-only bread-product distributor with 200 employees and clients in 10 states.

Responsible for all branding, marketing, communications, and business development programmes. Departed when the company was restructured after acquisition.

Susan does not provide key accomplishments. Why not? She wasn't at GoodSeed long enough to accomplish anything that compares favourably to her previous and future accomplishments. This is an important lesson: rather than inventing an accomplishment (or dressing a daily task to look like one), leave it blank.

MULTIPLE POSITIONS IN THE SAME COMPANY

We think there are two good ways of visually presenting this information. Which one you choose largely depends on whether you want to talk about each role individually, or your tenure at the company collectively – and this probably depends on how recently you held these roles. If you're currently holding your second or more position in the same company, it's probably a good idea to talk about each position. After all, they represent your last few years of work experience and promotions. In this case, you can present this information like the example below.

DID YOU KNOW?

Referrals account for at least 30% of external hires? Always leave a job on good terms.

SUSAN FLETCHER

sfletcher67@gmail.com

Page 2

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Talent Acquisition Inc., New York, NY 2014 – Present
Talent Acquisition Inc. is one of the world's largest and fastest growing executive search and organisational leadership firms with more than 250 Partners, and offices in 53 cities across 28 countries.

Partner, Head of CV Writing 2016 – Present
 Responsible for writing the CV book, editing the CV book, and keeping you on your toes.

- Key Accomplishments
- Wrote
 - Edited
 - Did not put periods after in-example bullet points

Partner, Head of CV Writing 2014 – 2016
 Responsible for conceiving of and researching a project involving CVs.

- Key Accomplishments
- Invented Sally Fletcher, GoodSeed Baking Co, and other fictions

If you held the positions several decades ago, however, it might be easier to put the titles one after the other and then summarise your entire tenure:

SUSAN FLETCHER

sfletcher67@gmail.com

Page 2

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Hands @ Work, New York, NY 2000 - May 2006
Hands @ Work was the world's first Internet recruiting firm. It was bought and taken private by ZYX Inc. in 2008.

Partner 2004 - 2006

Principal 2000 - 2004

Responsible for doing my job.

Key Accomplishments

- Did it well

5. EDUCATION

Your education section should be formatted just like your professional experience section, again in reverse chronological order, but without a company description. See the following example:

SUSAN FLETCHER Page 2
sfletcher67@gmail.com

EDUCATION

| Institution, location | Year of degree |
|---|----------------|
| Degree | |
| Awards, honours, club memberships, sports teams | |

The closer your university years are to the present, the more relevant the information about them. The insurance executive with 35-years of industry experience doesn't need to say that she got a First Class Honours Degree, but someone five years out of university definitely should.

DID YOU KNOW?

Half of recruiters will disregard a CV if it contains too many clichés. Avoid 'Highly motivated', 'good communicator', 'team player', you know the kind of thing.

6. ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

This final section of a CV should include your awards and recognitions, board seats, professional memberships and certifications, volunteer activities, publication history, and language fluencies. Can you speak multiple languages? Would they be relevant to the position you're applying to? Make sure you add that fact.

As in 'Fluent in Spanish and French.'

In general, we don't advise listing hobbies. It's not particularly useful for an employer to know that you are an avid runner or swimmer. But if you've completed several competitive marathons, or better still, raised money that way, we'd recommend saying so. Why? First off, it demonstrates a commitment to meeting personal objectives, which can translate into meeting professional ones. Secondly, it shows a social conscience. And if you ran in a rabbit costume, you've definitely got an ice-breaker at the interview! And don't forget, running is an affinity group:

if the CEO of the company at which you are interviewing is also a marathon runner, you may begin the interview talking about your various races - even before talking about your qualifications for the position in question.

It is also worth noting that in some cases it may be helpful to divide the additional information section into multiple parts, or change its name. A journalist, for example, might entitle their additional information section Publications. A seasoned

SUSAN FLETCHER
sfletcher67@gmail.com

Page 3

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

- Member, The CV Enterprise forum Current
- Member, Resume Experts United Current
- Member, Big City Sprinters (cycling team) Former
- Published: "The Resume in the Digital Age" (OB Journal) 2018
- Director, Yale School of the Resume Alumni Board 2009 - 2017

consulting executive who has sat on multiple boards might have a section devoted to board membership, another to associations, and another to publications. Do whatever best reflects your career history:

SUSAN FLETCHER

sletcher67@gmail.com

Page 3

BOARDS

- | | |
|---------------------------------------|-------------|
| • Chair, Rapid Movement Motor Company | Current |
| • Director, Not-a-Bump Airline | Current |
| • Director, the Resume Writers Guild | 2009 - 2017 |

MEMBERSHIPS

- | | |
|--|---------|
| • Member, the Headhunters' Caucus | Current |
| • Member, the We'll-Find-You Association | Current |
| • Member, Big City Spinners (cycling team) | Former |

PUBLICATIONS

- | | |
|---|------|
| • "The Resume in the Digital Age" (OB Journal) | 2018 |
| • "The Not-So-Great European Novel" (Knopf) | 2017 |
| • "Goodbye to All Lists" (The Feudal Business Review, No. 16) | 2017 |

HOW TO REFLECT DIVERSITY

Companies are actively seeking diversity at all levels, so if you are a minority or non-normative individual, it's not a bad idea to reflect this on your CV.

We think the best way to incorporate these facts is in your CV's additional information or education sections. Were you a member of a minority-oriented university group? Mention it in your education section. Are you a member of the Asian Women's Leadership Institute? Put this in your additional information section. Did you publish an essay about your experiences as a minority university student? Be sure to describe it along with your other publications.

7. WHAT NOT TO INCLUDE ON YOUR CV

REFERENCES

Do not provide references, unless they're specifically asked for. Do not include any version of "References Available on Request." Employers assume that you can produce references. It's a waste of space and reader attention.

TESTIMONIALS

Also a no-no, unless of course Bill Gates called you the 'most talented coder he had ever met'.

PERSONAL INFORMATION

Do not include marital status, age, weight, health conditions, or a photograph. This sort of information was once expected. Now it's definitely TMI.

SALARY

Do not include a salary, unless specifically asked to do so.

TELL THE TRUTH

A 2017 study found that 85% of employers had caught applicants fibbing on their resumes, almost a 20% increase from 2012. Competition is fierce. The average corporate job post gets more than 250 responses and the widespread adoption of applicant tracking systems has pressured less competitive job seekers to stretch the truth to fit algorithms.

Almost all recruiters today run background checks, search for backdoor references, study your internet presence, and use behavioural interviewing techniques to make sure that what you've said about yourself is true. Most will drop a candidate from consideration if they discover that they have lied about their background. Remember, you are the headhunter's product, and if you are revealed to have created 'fake news', they look bad in their client's eyes.

DID YOU KNOW?

70% of employers have rejected potential employees based on negative information they found online.

PART II

Beyond the CV

TAKE CHARGE OF YOUR INTERNET EXISTENCE

It's as much a virtual world as a physical one in executive search and reputation management. So, getting your CV right is just half of the job. You have to look just as good online too.

In today's digital world, recruiters will study your LinkedIn profile, public Facebook pictures, blog posts, newspaper articles, and, regrettably, police reports. Your CV and your online image should be consistent. Discrepancies will lead to awkward questions.

Start your personal brand health-check with an internet search. Get into the habit of Googling your name every six months.

Take the trouble to conduct several separate searches with variations in the search terms. Potentially illuminating options include pairing your name with your job title, current employer, area of expertise, geographic location and sector in which you work.

If the Google results throw up something negative or embarrassing, you should address this problem straightaway. The absolutely worst time to discover bad press about you is when it's raised in your interview.

LINKEDIN

Corporate HR and executive search professionals use LinkedIn all the time. If you're on LinkedIn, you're much more likely to be contacted. (And if a recruiter wants to connect, say yes.) LinkedIn connections can also function as references and affinity group-identifiers. Make sure that the CVs you've created are matched by your LinkedIn profile.

LinkedIn also offers a great forum for sounding the part. Perhaps you have the depth of knowledge about a key issue or trends in your sector to write an interesting thought leadership piece. Or if not a full-blown thought leadership viewpoint, maybe you can post some less-involved content that's still relevant and of value to your peers. Whatever you put up on the platform plays a part in how you position yourself.

Take care not to gratuitously offend, appear out of touch or make silly mistakes.

Moreover, don't simply cut and paste your entire CV. Cherry pick and emphasise achievements that underline your value proposition and mark you out as a strong candidate for the step up you want to take. Be sure to weave in a few carefully chosen keywords relating to your job specification and industry sector. This will boost your visibility to recruiters hiring for a relevant executive position.

But don't overdo it. Your profile information should read well and convey your career trajectory. You should definitely avoid what search engine optimisation experts call "keyword stuffing" – shoehorning in keywords to the point of gibberish. This is off-putting to readers and in any case largely ineffective given that search engine technology has evolved to the point where it can spot and discount this kind of manipulation.

UPLOAD A PROFILE PICTURE

The absence of a headshot on a platform where the vast majority of members show their faces may damage your credibility and give the impression you are cold and uninterested in developing professional connections.

There's also the possibility of missing out on opportunities that spring from familiarity. When someone recognises you from an industry event or prior meeting, it may open doors. Your profile photo does not need to be professionally-taken, but it should be professional-looking.

TWITTER

Be careful what you tweet. With one angry, ill-considered tweet, you can lose your job. And the same goes for Facebook and Instagram. Quite simply, online there is no place to hide. If you wouldn't stand up and say it in front of a prospective employer, don't say it online.

Whichever social media platforms you use, do keep them up to date. A dormant account looks bad.

ONLINE NETWORK BUILDING

Build your network of online contacts wisely and remain career-focused, connecting with people predominantly in your professional cohort. This has dual advantages. Not only will recruiters find it easier to track you down, it will also help with how you are positioned and perceived.

Reply to message requests and connect with credible and relevant people to strengthen your network and enhance your online image. Interactions that begin online can quickly evolve – for instance, you might suggest moving the relationship on to a short meeting over a cup of coffee – with the potential to unlock new career opportunities.

You should also join and actively contribute to online groups covering your function or industry. The more closely related these are to your target job the better.

Actively taking control of your online image will make you more attractive in the eyes of recruiters and will enhance your prospects of future career success. Being familiar with the digital world has fast become the marker of the successful modern business leader, and using social media platforms successfully are the first steps in this regard.

OFFLINE NETWORK BUILDING

At the early stages of your non-executive search, your most powerful asset is your network of contacts, colleagues, mentors and friends. Who has seen you in action, and rates your potential as a non-executive director? Who do you know who is already a chairman, non-executive director or board member? Are there non-executive directors of your own organisation who you can approach for informal advice, or even a longer-term mentoring relationship?

Extend your contact base to those in the advisory community. Bankers, brokers, accountancy firms and lawyers may often be sourced for ideas as to potential non-executive directors. Be sure they are aware of your interest.

Let's fast forward, and assume you have been shortlisted for a role or even offered the position. A standard part of any headhunter's process will be to take up references. Think hard at an early stage about who those people might be. Non-executive director candidates need them batting on their behalf at the earliest possible stage as endorsers, promoters, door-openers and mentors.

In short, put your network to work. Online or off, it is an asset that you need to sweat.

Good luck.

WORKING WITH HEADHUNTERS

We want to help. But remember we are busy working on current assignments, and our ability to meet potential candidates on a speculative basis is limited. (To provide some perspective, Odgers Berndtson can receive up to 50,000 CVs a year. These are not all for non-executive positions, but still...)

Think about how you make your approach to headhunters a warm one. Existing contacts within search firms are valuable; even if a consultant does not operate in the non-executive sector, he or she will be able to direct you accordingly.

If you are not well connected in our industry, then think about those in your network who are. An introduction from your chairman, chief executive or HR director can be a powerful means of opening the door and differentiating yourself.

We are delighted if you stay connected with us and keep us informed. As your roles or responsibilities change, please let us have a revised CV and contact details. If you secure a new role, let us know. Ensuring that we understand your objectives, the sorts of roles you seek, and your capacity to undertake them is vital intelligence for us and lies at the heart of our work. Please help us to help you.

TALENTED PEOPLE ARE OUR LIFEblood.

THAT'S WHY WE HAVE A CANDIDATE CHARTER

Whether we approach you about a specific opportunity, or you contact us to share your CV and career ambitions, we want you to have a constructive experience of engaging with Odgers Berndtson.

We recognise that we have a commitment to you, as well as to our client, and we undertake that our dealings with you will be professional, courteous, rigorous and honest.

You can find the details of our Candidate Charter online at <https://www.odgersberndtson.com/en-gb/about-us/candidate-charter>

ABOUT ODGERS BERNDTSON

For over 50 years, Odgers Berndtson has helped some of the world's biggest and best organisations find the senior talent to drive their agendas.

We deliver executive search, assessment and development to businesses and organisations varying in size, structure and maturity. We do that across over 50 sectors, whether commercial, public or not-for-profit, and draw on the experience of more than 250 Partners and their teams in 29 countries.

